

The Eagle in the Chicken Coup

A man noticed a chicken farm at the side of the road. He took a closer look. He saw a golden eagle -- with golden brown feathers. But what was more unusual was that it acted like a chicken. It even sounded like a chicken -- "Bwack, bwack, bwack, bwack!"

The man spoke to the farmer about the eagle, "I agree with you sir, but he is happy the way he is." replied the farmer. The man said, "Well, if you won't help this poor eagle, I will!" The man picked up the eagle and put him in his car. He drove into the mountains. He stopped by a cliff.

"Spread your wings and take off!" The man shouted, but the bird didn't move. The eagle just cocked back his head and said, "Cock-a-doodle-doo!"

He learned that you can't force a person to change. A person will not change until they are ready to change. We can't force change.

But I will always be all that I can be.
